

Light on the Bay

R. F. Tripp

I sat high on a dune and looked at the bay.

The light on the water was a silvery tray that moved with the wind.

At first it was round like the sun,

then it would bend

and float on top

like a mercury drop

—shiver, then stop.

Then a cloud came along

and all of a sudden

it was suddenly gone.